CORRIGENDUM

Patent application no. 202541042682 was published in the Official Journal No. 22 of 2025 dated 30th May 2025 but inadvertently the publication page for the said application was found missing from the Official Journal. Though the said application was deemed to be published on 30th May 2025 but the publication data page for the same was not actually present in the Official Journal on the said date. Therefore, this office is again publishing the application with all the relevant data needed for publication in the Official Journal No. 5 of 2026 dated 30th January 2026.

(57) Abstract :

AI-DRIVEN FOOD TRACKING AND DIET RECOMMENDATIONS WITH CALORIE ESTIMATION The method for the development of a personalized diet recommendation and meal monitoring system powered by AI that incorporates real-time calorie estimation to encourage better 5 eating practices. The technology uses deep learning and computer vision algorithms to recognize different foods from photos and calculates their calorie content based on nutritional databases and portion sizes. Additionally, the platform uses user-specific information to create personalized meal plans and dietary recommendations, including age, weight, activity level, and dietary preferences. A machine learning-powered recommendation engine 10 continuously improves recommendations in response to user input and consumption trends. The method provides a practical, easy-to-use tool for dietary self-management with the goal of bridging the gap between nutrition information and behaviour. The platform's potential to improve nutritional monitoring and support preventative healthcare is confirmed by experimental findings showing great accuracy in food recognition and calorie estimation. The 15 creation of intelligent dietary applications for fitness, healthcare, and lifestyle management has advanced significantly with this AI-based strategy. FIG.1
